What is spread betting in forex? Spread betting is a tax-free* method of trading the financial markets. Traders are able to speculate on the price movements of forex currency pairs by opening a position based on whether they think the currency will appreciate or depreciate. If you expect the value to rise, you would open a long or 'buy' position, or if you expect the value to fall, you would open a short or 'sell' position.

In spread betting, there is no actual exchange of the currency or purchase of the financial instrument that is being traded. Spread betting involves taking a position based on anticipating whether the price of a financial instrument will increase or decrease in the future. This form of betting means an investor will win or lose money based on the marginal variation of a particular outcome and the expected value spread quoted by the spread betting brokerage.
